Always Busy

I called on James Augustus Jinks, a carpenter of fame, to make a pair of kitchen sinks and mend a quilting frame. "I cannot come right now," he said, "your little chores to do: I have so blamed much work ahead the end is not in view. My time for weeks ahead is filled, I'm wanted everywhere; I have all sorts of shacks to build, and others to repair." A hundred workmen in the town are saving times are bad; they say they chase all chances down and can not earn a scad. #### PRESIDENTIAL PATRONAGE.

Ex-Senator Bourne Comments on The Star's Discussion of His Proposal of the program were Misses Rose

In your editorial of Saturday, discussing my suggestion that the evils incident to federal patronage be climinsted by providing for the election of certain administrative officers in the several states, you assume that the Master Milford Brotman as a violinist only object is the establishment of proper relations between the President In the minstrel show Daniel Schiller and the Senate. You say:

'As defined by the Constitution, the Otto E. Woerner, Percy Silverberg, Mypower of the President is not too great. ron Oppenheimer. Abe Marcus, Eddie Eshould not, of course, be misused. In Rosenblum and Percy Schwartz. the matier of appointments to office he should render unto the Senate the thing Dora Weinberg, Elizabeth Roct. Lena should render unto the Senate the thing that is the Senate's, in no case setting agide the Senate for outsiders, and particular members of his kitchen cabinet. A return to the constitutional order is all that is necessary to bring Mr. Wilson and the Senate into pleasant relations again."

There are two ends to be gained by directing the President of his power to son and the senate into pleasant reactions again."

There are two ends to be gained by divesting the President of his power to appoint such officers as postmasters, collectors and appraisers of customs, collectors of internal revenue, district attorneys, marshals and land officers:

First, relieve Congress from the dominator of the eventue, second, destroy nation of the executive; second, destroy the federal political machine. Every one of these officers is now a partisan

In view of the demonstration in 1903 and 1912 of the power of the national machine to control a national convention, and in view of the express admission that patronage was used during the last administration to favor those members of Congress who acted upon legislation in such a manner as to please the President, I assert that more effective remedies are necessary, and that nothing short of distroying the power will remove the evil.

Take away the enormous political power the President has as the head of the administration. Free Congress from the domination of the executive. Let local officials be answerable to the people of their several jurisdictions for the efficiency of their service, subject to removal for cause and responsible upon their official bonds.

Thus will both Congress and the President be relieved of a vast amount of work not properly pertaining to their offices and be left free to give their attention more closely and extensively to legislation and administration. Nominating conventions will be free to select candidates desired by the people and local officials will be relieved of the duty of performing political service.
